The Ragan-Arnette House c. 1860 is a 2½ story side hall double parlor house located on the Oakwood-Conowingo Road. The main facade has a western exposure, and the main gable runs north/south.

The main block is 2 bays across by 2 rooms deep. A double story shed roof addition extends off the back of the house and is 2 bays deep by 2 bays across. Attached to the previous addition are single story shed additions. One screened in and the 4 other closed. A single story porch extends across the south and west sides of the main block.

The main block rests on an uncoursed stone basement and is partially sheathed with novelty siding. The slate roof is of medium pitch with a stretcher bond brick stack located centrally. The eaves are extended on all sides and the eaves left open.

The west (main) facade is 2 bays across with the entrance in the northern bay. The window sash is 2/2 with plain trim. Louvered shutters flank the windows. There are two gabled dormers on the roof with a patterned slate sheathing. The 2/2 sash windows have an arched upper sash. The eaves are extended on all sides with eaves left open.

The south facade has weatherboard siding and 2/2 sash windows with louvered shutters. The gable is decorated with fishscale shingles in a V shape.

The front porch extends to the south side and has 19th century cut-out brackets attached to turned posts. A banister incloses the porch and has square balusters.

The north gable end has similar detailing.

The back of the house is a joining of numerous additions. The shed roof is covered with tin. 2/2 sash were used and a exterior stretcher bond stack is on the south side. The detailing is basically very plain.
